
Market Volatility Returns

Weekly Update – July 3, 2017

As Q2 ended, markets hit a six-week volatility high.¹ While the tech sector declined during the week, consumer discretionary and industrial sectors drove stocks higher on Friday.² On Friday, the tech-heavy NASDAQ slumped 1.99%.³ The S&P fell 0.61% and the DOW dropped 0.21%.⁴ Globally, the MSCI EAFE declined 0.32%, and European markets and most of the Asian markets finished the week down.⁵

The Fed reported during the week that the largest U.S. banks passed the stress test evaluating their financial soundness. The test results indicate that banks have the capital structures to withstand difficult economic times.⁶ In addition, the results gave banks a green light to pay shareholders dividends and engage in share buybacks.⁷

Other Market News

- Q1 Gross Domestic Product Numbers Go Up: The Q1 GDP estimate improved to 1.4% on an annualized basis. Previous estimates were 1.2% and 0.7%. Consumer spending was also revised upward to 1.1% from previous estimates of 0.6% and 0.3%.⁸
- Durable Goods Orders Fall: Weakening commercial aircraft sales contributed to a 1.1% fall in May's durable goods orders. Core capital goods also fell 0.2%, surprising expectations for a 0.5% increase.⁹
- Consumer Confidence and Sentiment Rise: Consumer confidence exceeded expectations by 2 points in June as individuals who reported that jobs are difficult to find fell by 0.3%.¹⁰ The Consumer Sentiment Index rebounded in the second half of June to 95.1, but remains less than May's 97.1 reading.¹¹
- Pending Home Sales Weaken: Despite an expected 0.5% gain, pending home sales dropped 0.8% in May. The 3-month run of slowing sales suggests a weakening housing sector.¹²
- Home Price Index Softens: The Home Price Index fell from an annual increase of 5.9% to 5.7% year-over-year. This index reflects monthly changes in housing prices over 20 metropolitan regions. San Francisco, Boston, and Cleveland all reported lower housing price data.¹³
- Oil Prices Climb: Although oil prices ended last Friday at $46.04 a barrel, oil closed the first-half of the year down 14%, its weakest performance since 1998. Ongoing concerns about an oversupplied market continue to influence investors despite a dip in U.S. production slowing the bearish outlook.¹⁴

- Import/Export Data Modestly Brightens: Imported goods dropped to $193 billion and exports improved to $127.1 billion in May. While the $65.9 billion difference remains significant, this quarter's goods gap is averaging $66.5 billion a month.¹⁵
- The Dollar Drops: Though marginally recovering on Friday, the U.S. dollar reported its largest quarterly decline in almost 7 years against other major currencies.¹⁶

The Week Ahead

U.S. markets close on Tuesday for the July 4th holiday. During the shortened trading week, the markets will look at manufacturing indices, motor vehicle sales, and employment data reports. As the data becomes available, investors will focus on how Q2 numbers roll out and what might be developing for the rest of the year.¹⁷

Protect Your EFIN from Fraud*

Preventing identity theft and protecting accounts filed with the IRS is a year-round responsibility for taxpayers. Thieves commonly break into tax professionals' online accounts to steal taxpayers' Electronic Filing Identification Number (EFIN). Fortunately, you can take steps to manage your account and monitor suspicious activity throughout the year.

To check your EFIN records:

1. Register for the IRS e-services.

If you've not yet registered with IRS e-services, then you'll need to do so before checking your EFIN records. You can create an account through the IRS website.

2. Check the EFIN records associated with your account.

Log in to your e-services account. From there, you can opt to view your "EFIN Status," which updates weekly and lists the number of tax returns associated with your account.

3. Report suspicious activity.

Promptly contact the IRS if you see discrepancies between your listed file returns and your personal records. You can report your concern by calling the IRS e-Help Desk at 866-255-0654.

Avoid Chunking Your Chip

Chunking your chip most often happens when golfers try to avoid swinging their club too hard. They stand too far away from the ball, take a full swing, and try to slow the impact at the last moment. The result: a chunked chip. Try moving closer to the ball, making your shaft vertical so the clubhead is on its toe.

If you find yourself chunking the ball, follow these steps to improve your stance and swing.

Step 1: Stand directly across from the ball, about 10 inches away. You'll want to step in with your back foot.

Step 2: Identify your target and aim your clubface directly at it.

Step 3: Settle your weight forward by stepping in with your front foot; keep your weight shifted as such throughout your swing.

Step 4: Make sure you lean the shaft slightly toward the target. From there, brush back and through.

Control Bruising with Self-Care

Bruises result when blood vessels break and leak into tissues near the surface of your skin. The often black-and-blue bruise will stay visible and change colors until it fully heals. Here are some ways that you can care for any bruises once they happen.

- Elevation: Be sure to lift up the part of your body with bruising.
- Ice Packs: Hold either ice packs wrapped in a cloth or a towel soaked in cold water on the bruise for up to 10 minutes. Repeat multiple times a day, up to one or two days after the injury and as needed.
- Time to Rest: Make sure you rest the injured body part and minimize movement.
- Reduce Pain and Swelling: Find relief from pain by taking either aspirin or ibuprofen.

If the injury lingers after 3 days without lessening, you may need deeper treatment. Consult your doctor if the pain continues or if you have a history of internal bleeding or other symptoms emerge, such as nose bleeds.

Alternative Ways to Use Baking Soda

The baking soda you store in your cabinets is more helpful than you may think. As a chemical compound, sodium bicarbonate is a great pH neutralizer and buffer, making it helpful for a variety of home and personal care needs. As many beauty and cleaning products can contain harmful chemicals, swapping some of these items with baking soda can help you minimize the toxins in your home. Here are some easy ways to use baking soda beyond baking.

- Mouth Freshener: When combined with water, you can create a mouth rinse that will both freshen your mouth and neutralize any odors (rather than just cover them up). To do so, mix one tsp of baking soda with a half-glass of water. Swish some in your mouth, spit it out, and rinse.
- Antacid: You can use baking soda to settle heartburn, acid indigestion, and an upset stomach. To do so, follow the instructions listed on the baking soda package.
- Silver Polish: Mixing 3-parts baking soda with 1 part water will create a great polish for your silver. Rub the mixture onto the silver with a clean sponge or cloth, rinse, and dry.
- Garbage Disposal Deodorizer: You can freshen your garbage disposal and neutralize odors by sprinkling baking soda down the drain and running warm tap water.
